Plea:

Student A pled "Not in violation."

Testimony:

Student A said she completed the unpledged assignment all by herself. She was contacted by Student B to get help. Student A tried to help over the phone, but it was difficult to explain over the phone. Student B asked for Student A's code to refer to. Student A sent Student B her code via email, understanding that the assignment was unpledged. Student A trusted Student B would abide by the Honor Code and not copy her work. Student A referred to the phone record and email evidence to support that she submitted the assignment before helping Student B.

Student A referred to the class syllabus to state that unpledged assignments encourage collaboration. According to Student A, the only possible violation is to publicly post the code online or if the student copy and pastes another student's work, which she says she did not. She also mentioned the professor's clarification in this portion.

Student A then explained the structure of her code to clarify why she needed to send the entire code instead of a single section. Student A did not have any prior contact with Student B before the phone call.

Verdict Deliberations:

Council members believed that a preponderance of the evidence supported that a violation occurred because the code is very similar between Student A and Student B. The code is very similar. Along with the email of the code being sent, the Council believes that the similarities most likely arose from copy and paste.

Vote #1: Does a preponderance of the evidence support that a violation occurred?

The Council then discussed whether or not Student A committed the violation.

The Council believed that Student A completed the assignment on her own. The evidence supports that Student A helped Student B after she had completed the assignment. Therefore, the Council believes Student A completed the assignment on her own. In addition, the email is not considered to be posting code publicly online, so panelists believed it does not violate this aspect of the course honor code. Therefore, the Council concluded that Student A is not in violation.
